Welcome

by Pamela Maryfield

Staines is special. Yes, it is a splendid and varied, though modestly sized, shopping centre, but it is very much more. It deserves some time for exploration beyond the shops to appreciate its character.

First, Staines is a Thameside town. The river has given Staines importance and an economic lifeline. Today, it is the setting for leisurely picnics and for enjoying the boating life of skiffs, punts, sleek fibre-glass regatta racers and old fashioned barges. A good place to enjoy this river scene is the Memorial Gardens, newly laid out with water features and a sculpture of the town's symbol, its swans. The upstream view is framed by the elegant 1832 John Rennie bridge, while that downstream is punctuated by the spire of St Peter's church.

For the Romans, the Thames crossing at Staines was an early and strategic point and may even have pre-dated the crossing in London. Why choose this particular point?

The reason is geological. Unusually in the lower Thames valley, there is a series of gravel islands on either side of the river. These provide settlement sites above the flood plain and sound footings north and south for a bridge. If you are observant, you may still distinguish the small rises in the land right across the town centre. Excavations in the 1970s ahead of developing the Elmsleigh Centre, revealed valuable evidence of a Roman settlement and the wet conditions preserved scraps of perishable articles such as leather sandals and a wooden comb.

Staines has other snatches of waterways which have been incorporated into the most recent developments. North of the pedestrianised High Street - a lively spot on market days - The River Coln flows through the Two Rivers Shopping Centre. Wander west a little into Hale Street and Church Street to find the River Wraysbury flowing to the Coln before both join the Thames near the Town Pier.

Staines Bridge is essentially the graceful structure opened by William IV in 1832 and designed by John Rennie. It was the fourth attempt to replace the medieval bridge, itself partially destroyed in the 17th century during the civil war, when Staines was, for a time, at the heart of the fighting. It was eventually held by the Parliamentary forces, whose soldiers were billeted on the townsfolk and left without paying their bills!

With its watery surroundings, it is not surprising that Staines has had several mills. The Domesday book stated that Staines had six valued at 64 shillings. Later they provided income for the lord of the manor, the Abbey of Westminster, and they ground the flour for the Abbot's table. More recently they were adapted to become breweries, which had a ready and thirsty market in London. A prominent landmark on Bridge Street is the tower of the former Courage brewery and near the station the Oast House is now an adult education centre. Also, the inventor of linoleum, the first affordable floor covering, set up his business on what is now the Two Rivers shopping centre in the 1870s. The factory was, for many years, the town's largest employer and was commemorated recently by sculpture on the High Street.

In the late 20th century the town struggled to accommodate the traffic which passed through on the A30, the old Great South-West Road. In the 1950s, traffic jammed the bridge and the High Street. There has been relief in several stages, making for years of awkward compromise and the loss of some "heritage" - the oldest buildings and much of the street pattern. But, at last the various schemes have come together and the losses have provoked a vigorous and watchful civic pride. However, Staines has always focused on its long held ambition, to be a major, vibrant and welcoming town centre.

Pamela Maryfield is the author of "Staines – A History" which is available at Waterstone's, WHSmiths and Books etc.

Have you discovered Staines?

Do you find that when you want to go out there are just so many choices of things to do? Shopping, taking time out to unwind, enjoying a good meal, working out, meeting a friend for a drink, or casually browsing for something special. It is rare to find one place that can offer them all, and that's what makes Staines so exciting.

With excellent transport links and extensive parking facilities, coming to Staines is an easy decision to make - what's more difficult is deciding what to do first!

The River

Staines is a traditional riverside town with a wealth of history. Why not find a nice spot by the river, either picnicking in one of our fantastic riverside parks or enjoying a delicious meal in one of our many fine pubs and restaurants and enjoy watching life on the river float past.

The Shops

Staines has a fully pedestrianised shopping experience with the High Street and two large shopping centres, at Two Rivers and The Elmsleigh. You'll find many of the major retail names, from Debenhams to Boots, Waitrose to Marks & Spencer, Bhs to Woolworth's, plus plenty more

...and of course, don't forget to visit the many small independent shops in the town centre that help make shopping in Staines such an enjoyable experience - and if you're in town on a Wednesday or Saturday you can also enjoy the hustle and bustle of the busy market on the High Street.

But Staines is more than just a town centre and if you explore some of our other streets such as Church Street and the far ends of the High Street you'll find an exciting assortment of retail shops that make Staines such an attraction.

Time Out

After all that you'll probably want to wind down. You could catch a movie at the multiplex 10-screen cinema or watch the world go by from the comfort of a cosy café or enjoy a meal or a drink in one of the many restaurants, bars and pubs in the town which cater for all tastes. Or you may wish to pamper yourself with a complete mind and body makeover at one of the local beauty salons or gyms. The entertainment doesn't end when the sun goes down either, with many bars and pubs open till late.

You may just find that a day just isn't long enough!

Historic Church Street

Church Street lies at the top end of the High Street and is one of Staines' most attractive locations. The street basks in an aura of gentle charm and with its centuries old surroundings and tangible links with the past, provides a showcase for all that is good about the town. It is no wonder that television companies regularly use it for atmospheric location work – one such use has been as part of Oxford in the popular Inspector Morse series.

The Rivers Coln and Wraysbury join midway down Church Street, forming a tranquil oasis of flowing water and overhanging trees that almost make you forget where you are. Church Street's main attraction however is the plethora of independent businesses. No where else in Staines will you find such a collection of established businesses providing such a vast array of services.

With all the big national companies and the development of Staines, the businesses of Church Street have managed to retain their own identity and this is mainly due to the tightly knit community spirit the store owners have with each other. Wherever you go you are sure to receive a warm and friendly greeting.

So don't be too shy to stand and stare at the fine buildings, some of which date back 300 years, for the owners are proud of the street and it's vital role in Staines' town centre
